

Fireworks

Dr. Ani Kalayjian

What is it about fireworks that bring joy to us at all ages?
But Aren't fireworks like life itself?

At the beginning we are so excited, we drop everything and put our full attention to it;
We are curious, excited, intrigued, and in awe,
We look at each movement, color, shape,
sound and direction with acknowledgment!

Then we kind of get desensitized,
We take life for granted, losing our purpose,
We continue observing with less excitement, saying,
"Oh, it's just like the other one"
we are familiar, it's no longer new!

Then at the finale, we feel the dread of the end, we move with more intensity, vigor, sound and purpose.
It's orgasmic, we feel the vibrations, the sound, the smell, we want life to last forever!
We try to complete our tasks, goals, & meet our purpose, as our journey comes closer to the end.

At the end, our lights dim, brilliance fades, sounds are muffled and our pieces are spread all around,
As people witness our finale!

People from far and near look in quietly,
Reflecting at our journey, sharing their thoughts, feelings and memories alike!
As "Oh, that was a surprise, it was intense, I didn't know that it was the end, I wish it continued just a little more?"

As the sounds subside, pieces of fireworks drop all around, and all we are left with are the memories! And once again we look with amazement, sorrow, and grace
